Allitix and Anaplan: Connected Planning for Higher Education

Whether public or private, large or small, Higher Education is facing undeniable pressures must embrace constant change. Institutions are preparing for an increasing number of internal and external pressures. These entail both economic (pricing sensitivity, increased competition, limited state and federal funding, investment performance) and a changing environment (shifting student profiles, increasing adoption of technology, changing education delivery methods). How can institutions manage and support these needs while still staying true to their mission?

Institutions need a flexible and connected way to plan and budget for the future. Increased communication, collaboration and transparency across the organization allow institutions to better anticipate and react to an ever-changing landscape.

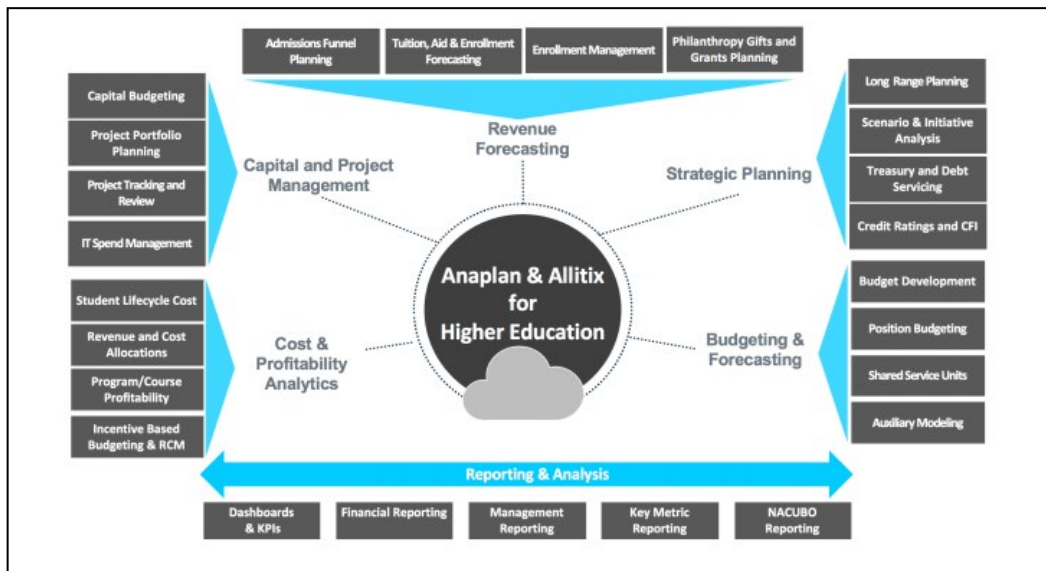

As institutions evaluate the next decade with continuing declines in population growth, increased tuition discounting, shrinking endowments and the demands for accessibility, affordability and diversity, CFOs become critical to take the mission and strategic plans of the institution and resource it with an eye on both the short and long-term goals for the coming years.

In order to do this, your planning and modeling tools need to be business, finance, enrollment, or student affairs owned. Anaplan is the first platform to truly be able to successfully deliver on these capabilities and Allitix is the partner with over a decade of Higher Education experience and success to enable this platform for your institution.
